Questions 46-50: Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions given below it.

A blanket ban on defection will weaken rather than strengthen democracy, in whose name it is being sought to be imposed. Granted, political defection is increasingly less an act of ideological defiance than one of pure opportunism. Granted also that it is illogical to allow one third of the party to split but not a lesser number. Yet, for all its flaws, the current law recognizes and respects one fundamental principle: The right to dissent. Democracy is not about showing the door to one who dares to disagree. Democracy is about granting her the right to dissent from within the fold. In a household context, it would be akin to a father throwing out his rebellious daughter. How would a democratic father deal with this situation? He would allow the daughter to register her protest, knowing full well that to not do so would stifle the youngster's intellectual growth and turn her into a malcontent.

The need to foster a democratic spirit is all the more in a political party which derives its legitimacy from participation in democratic elections. Indeed, like charity, democracy most begins at home. A political party that is intolerant to internal dissent can hardly be expected to be liberal and democratic in its external conduct. To tell a legislator that he owes to his party, which has facilitated his election, never to disagree with it, is the equivalent of asking that he remain forever in bondage. To do so is to journey back to the feudal age, when a servant who rebelled against the master would be called a 'namak haram'. Take the case of a party that asks for votes on one ideological platform but switches course once it forms a government. What is the sanctity of the party whip issued in such a situation? Should the conscientious MP vote as ordered or should she defy the whip? It has to be the latter and there can be no two views on this. Nor is it valid to argue that differences can be aired in private but must not translate into a vote for voting is the ultimate expression of a person's conscience.

46. According to the passage, a political party which does not tolerate any internal dissent.

- (a) Is doomed to disintegrate in the long run.
(b) Maintains strict discipline and survives in the long run.
(c) Is a boon to the democratic traditions and principles.
(d) Is unlikely to be liberal and democratic in its external conduct.

47. Which of the following is expressed as a characteristic of the feudal age in the passage?

- (a) Extending the family values to the political arena.
(b) Changing the ideological platform once in government.
(c) Any disobedience of the people in power is to be treated as treachery.
(d) Telling the legislator that he got elected because of the party.

48. In which of the following matters does the author appreciate the existing law with regard to defection?

- (a) Individual member's freedom to express opinion different from the party line.
(b) A total prohibition on joining another party for personal party.
(c) Entering election fray without affiliation to any political party.
(d) A political party to be liberal and democratic both in its internal and external conduct

49. According to the passage, political defection is increasingly taking place:

- (a) More on ideological grounds.
(b) To strength the democratic process.
(c) As a result of basic conceptual differences.
(d) As a matter of pure opportunism.
