Read the passage and answer the following question:

What I have tried to do is to discern and articulate the natural laws of a particular kind of human undertaking, which I have described as “the enterprise of subjecting human conduct to the governance of rules”. These natural laws have nothing to do with any “brooding omnipresence in the skies.” Nor have they the slightest affinity with any such proposition as that the practice of contraception is a violation of God’s law. They remain entirely terrestrial in origin and application.

They are not “higher” laws; if any metaphor of elevation is appropriate they should be called “lower” laws. They are like the natural laws of carpentry, or at least those laws respected by a carpenter who wants the house he builds to remain standing and serve the purpose of those who live in it.

Though these natural laws touch one of the most vital of human activities they obviously do not exhaust the whole of man’s moral life. They have nothing to say on topics as polygamy, the study of Marx, the worship of God, the progressive income tax, or the subjugation of women. If the question be raised whether any of these subjects, or others like them, should be taken as objects of legislation, that question relates to what I have called the external morality of law.

As a convenient (though not wholly satisfactory) way of describing the distinction being taken we may speak of a procedural, as distinguished from a substantive natural law. What I have called the internal morality of law is in this sense a procedural version of natural law, though to avoid misunderstanding the word ‘procedural’ should be assigned a special and expanded sense so that it would include, for example, a substantive accord between official action and enacted law. The term ‘procedural’ is, however, broadly appropriate as indicating that we are concerned, not with the substantive aims of legal rules, but with the ways in which a system of rules for governing human conduct must be constructed and administered if it is to be efficacious and at the same time remain what it purports to be.

1. The passage is an explanation of....

1. Legal Morality
2. The Worship of God
3. Natural Law
4. God’s Law

Choose the correct option from below

- (A) 1,2,3 & 4

- (D) 3 only

2. The procedural version of natural law relates to

- (A) Internal morality
- (B) External morality
- (C) Objects of legislation
- (D) Human activities

3. Natural laws, according to this passage, are

1. the ones, having brooding omnipresence in the skies
2. terrestrial in origin and application
3. higher laws
4. lower laws

Choose the correct option from below:

- (A) 1 and 3 both
(B) 1,2 and 3 only
(C) 2 and 3 both
(D) 2 and 4 both

4. The term 'procedural' means and includes

1. A substantive accord between official action and enacted law
2. Administration of a system of rules for governing human conduct
3. Construction of a system of rules for governing human conduct
4. External morality

Choose the correct option from below

- (A) 1,2,3 & 4
